For Immediate Release

Massive potential of London Southend Airport

London Southend Airport, now operated by its new owners the Eddie Stobart Group, is proving to be a massive success story for the town with the potential to cope with up to two million passengers every year subject to approval for an extended runway.

Should such approval be given, the airport will have a new terminal building and mainline train station built to reflect its importance to both Southend and London.

In recent years there has been significant expansion with a host of new businesses being attracted to business parks within the proximity of the airport creating many new jobs and opportunities.

The airport is particularly well placed to serve London during the 2012 Olympics and is potentially a massive asset for businesses looking to relocate to the Southend area.
